- Re-arranging the Algerian poetic verse according to the specificity imposed by the intellectual, cultural and critical contexts of the poetic text, through the theorems of Arab and non-Arabic poetics.

The Conference aims to raise the major poetic questions that have been achieved for the contemporary Algerian creative scene as the starting point for critical effectiveness, in order to reconsider them and enrich them with serious studies.

Preamble of the conference

Poetry is a transformer in its essence, full of permanent ability to open and ever renewed, and in this ontological condition, it refuses to fall captive to a singular conception that may obscure suggestions of moving from one static state to another full of movement that knows no interruption or stability. It is the endless poetic process and what it imposes on the inevitable tendency towards the openness in which poetry is formed and transformed.

Because the penetration of the creative and prevalent familiarity takes place only through the poetic self that refuses to obey a ready-made formal pattern that hinders the movement of the text and prevents the extended poetic flux, the starting point for the search for new textual conquests is this self that announces its presence urgently by investing the given outside the text. And its formulation in the form of different concepts reproduces a new text. Therefore, it can be said that the radical transformation is a movement of deep consciousness that starts from the inside and then appears in different poetic forms.

Thus, contemporary Algerian poetry in all its various forms, combines intellectual, cultural and civilizational awareness on the one hand, as well as self-awareness that cannot be separated from it on the other hand, until the poetic achievement became transformed by the transformations and changes of human reality.

The reading self has also realized the possibilities of new writing that contemporary Algerian poetics introduced when it opened a broad creative horizon through which the reader's relationship with the text has changed. The reader is no longer passive satisfied with what the text gives, rather, he has become a reader with critical activity that contributes to the production of a text that is open to several possibilities.

Topic of the Conference

Research on contemporary Algerian poetry in terms of the diversity of forms and the multiplicity of readings imposes a number of problems, so we may ask about the extent of the Algerian poets' awareness of the achievements of contemporary poetry. Did they realize what poetry is? What are the most important poetic variations presented by contemporary Algerian poets? Have these poetic forms managed to achieve transformation and transcendence? What are the most important reference contexts that made the contemporary Algerian poetic reality? How do Algerian critics and others read contemporary Algerian poetic creative texts? We hope this Conference will discuss and enrich these issues.

The Conference aims to read the contemporary Algerian poetic achievement from different angles, starting with the poetic experiences that represented the actual
