

Conference Main Research Questions:

This conference seeks to answer many questions, including the following:

- What are the challenges of scientific research among students of the Arabic Language and Literature (conceptualization and representation)?
- What is the current situation of scientific research in the Department of the Arabic Language and Literature in this era of digitalization, and how it can be improved?
- What are the key challenges posed by the digital transformation on academic researchers?
- What standards and strategies should be adopted to promote the academic scientific research?

Eligible Candidates: University professors, researchers and doctoral students

Conference Main Axes:

Axe One: Current practices regarding scientific research in the field of the Arabic Language and Literature, at the level of supervision, guidance and assessment

Axe Two: Digitalization: its concept and its impact on the development of scientific research

Axe Three: Challenges of academic scientific research in the digital era

Axe Four: The complementary relationships between language skills, computing skills and communication techniques between scientific research and the information revolution has become an urgent necessity and an undeniable steadfast fact that cannot be skipped. Digitalization began to pervade the field of Education in a way that confused all those in charge of it, leading to not only the emergence of numerous issues, but also placing researchers in front of great technological challenges. As a result, it became very imperative for researchers to master a new style of acquiring knowledge and be acquainted with the necessary tools to keep pace with this era. Actually, the locomotive of this age is driven by modern Information Technology that allows collecting, storing, processing and transferring information by relying on the principles of encryption (i.e. the electronic encoding of information in the form of digital data, text, image or sound...etc.), which represent the overlapping integration of the huge leaps in computing and communication technology. Researchers, in general, and students of the Arabic Language and Literature, in particular, face many difficulties at the level of proper preparation of academic scientific research, the use of modern multimedia technology instead of the traditional tools, and the use of distance learning platforms, electronic blogs and digital books...etc., which characterize this era of information overload and inflation of knowledge. If betting on the traditional academic research was based on accumulating knowledge with much ado in the past, the challenge, today, in scientific research, is to encourage researchers to be creative in deepening and enriching knowledge and developing their abilities to absorb the curriculum and represent it in both theory and practice.

Axe Six: Methods of literary and linguistic research and the problem of critique methods (theorization and representation)

Conference Objectives:

The conference aims at:

- Identifying the scientific research challenges that face students of the Arabic Language and Literature and suggesting solutions to overcome them.
- Finding solutions and developing strategies that may contribute in facing the challenges posed by digitalization.
- Discovering the level of scientific research skills of the Arabic Language and Literature students, and observing to what extent they are open to the different tools of the new Information and Communication Technology (ICT).
- Adopting comprehensive strategies and mechanisms that encourage researchers to conduct scientific research and facilitate the way for them in this age of information explosion.

Conference Body:

Honorary Conference Chairman: Prof. Zouhir Dibi, Rector of 'Larbi Ben M'hidi – Oum El-Bouaghi University'

General Manager: Prof. Chaker Lokman, Dean of the Faculty of Literature and Languages

Conference Chairman: Prof. Fateh Hambli, Director of the Laboratory
